SPRING 2020 EDITION: “ON THE BRIGHT SIDE”
No one could have expected that we would be spending most of our spring semester in a quarantine, much less in a world-wide pandemic due to the Coronavirus. Although Nutmeg Publishing and UConn students were not physically at UConn, and sadly could not report on spring semester events because of cancellations, our staff still wanted to publish a magazine for the Spring 2020 semester and all our constituents. The Spring 2020 edition: “On the Bright Side” is meant to feature UConn’s young artists and highlight our Nutmeg staff’s interests during quarantine. Some feature spreads include our collaboration with UConn Poetic Release in which their members submitted poems on living in our world during quarantine, various food and drink recipes created by our staff, as well as UConn students submitted artwork. Of course, this magazine would not have been possible without the hard work of the Nutmeg Publishing staff and all the art and poetry submissions we received. Personally, I would also like to thank all the healthcare workers and essential workers that have been working during this pandemic. All their hard work and dedication does not go unnoticed. To the UConn 2020 graduating class: your four years of hard work does not deserve to end with just a virtual commencement. Although the future is uncertain, the class of 2020 and our generation must speak our truths, hold ourselves and others accountable and carry the values that make us all huskies.

-Meira Tompkins
Each year, seniors in the UConn Department of Digital Media & Design spend their last undergraduate year at UConn working with a faculty advisor to conceptualize, create, and finalize innovative digital projects. Usually, the hard work and incentive of these seniors and their projects is commemorated and celebrated at the DMD Senior Exhibition in Jorgenson, but the Department of Digital Media & Design held the 2020 Senior Exhibition online because of the quarantine and social distancing in place due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Despite returning home to finish their year-long projects in quarantine, these seniors displayed their continuous effort and immense creativity with each of their very individualistic projects. All of these final projects were portfolio-ready, professional pieces of digital artwork that explored a range of messages and perspectives while presenting engaging animations or experiences. For some of these seniors, their projects were inventive digital experiences. These ranged from 3D games to video games to interactive web experiences with a variety of themes. In one project, a 3D game encouraged players to delve deeper and further explore the virtual environment with intriguing clues. Another senior created a 3D interactive experience that immersed players in the world of a marine biologist who misses his family while doing the research of his dreams. While some of these projects were digital experiences created to entice and excite players, others purposefully relaxed players. One senior created Wonder, an interactive web experience in which users are immersed in a relaxing virtual environment with wildlife, changing seasons, and ambient noise. The artist Cynthia Reinert, an eighth semester digital media and design major, explained that the project was created as “an outlet for users to release stress.” Even though all of these seniors had different purposes and ideas for their projects, each of their projects expressed their novel ideas while demonstrating their unique artistic style. Other seniors created projects that showed their ideas through enticing 2D or 3D animations. Some of these animations were more explorative stories about discovering earth in the galaxy or the scale of the universe, while other animations were more about the day-to-day life of human beings. A 3D animation titled Perfect Fit was one project that showed the journey of two incredibly expressive Legos working together to find their way. Although this story was about Legos, it is also applicable to humans in that “we can achieve more working together than we can on our own,” in the words of the artist Justin Woods, an eighth semester digital media and design major. This 3D animation highlighted the importance of helping each other when problems arise and working together to meet goals. All of the animations created by these seniors contained powerful messages in their stories, and every one of these seniors displayed their various skills and distinct techniques through their one-of-a-kind projects. The digital media and design majors for the class of 2020 impressed us all with their projects!
For the spring 2020 semester, UConn students were sent home to finish the semester in quarantine due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Since this was no ordinary semester, Nutmeg Publishing decided to bring the creative community at UConn together in a piece about artwork and poetry submitted by students during quarantine. Students submitted pieces that ranged from drawings to photographs to paintings to poems, and some of the pieces even touched upon living in the midst of a pandemic.

One student submitted a digital drawing of a strong black woman wearing her usual makeup and a face mask. The artist Stephen JuMo, a sixth semester fine arts major, explained that the woman “stands solid and firm” and “does not let the terrible times get the best of her.” As this was an unprecedented time for UConn students, Stephen’s piece leaves students with an important message even when the status of our world is uncertain, we can still be sure of who we are and have confidence in that. While Stephen showcased his digital drawing skills in his piece, other students demonstrated their talent and creativity through other forms of art. Fourth semester digital media and design major Meghan Foley demonstrated her well-rounded artistic abilities by submitting a variety of pieces: a painting of birds in a blue sky, abstract black and white pieces, photographs, collages, and typography pieces. While some of these works were class assignments, others were created solely for the pleasure of producing art. The collage of nature was Meghan’s favorite piece, as “it was really fun to make.” Students like Meghan and Stephen kept themselves entertained during quarantine with creative work that they enjoyed. Other students might want to follow their example and discover their own creative avenues and hobbies, as the end of the semester was a dull and scary time with everyone searching for anything to do.

WRITER: LILY HOERNER
DESIGNER: MEIRA TOMPKINS
FACEBOOK.COM/UCONNNUTMEGPUBLISHING | 9
Who uses typography?
All of us.

Typography allows the written word to be read.

“As one of the first and fundamental forms of communication, writing and typography trace their roots back to the Upper Palaeolithic, when cave paintings served symbolically as a form of language. As such civilizations advanced, so their need for communication became more complex. From Egyptian hieroglyphs with symbols and hieroglyphs to Sumerian cuneiform, the alphabets created by Phoenicians, taken over by Romans, onwards. The Romans have also refined the Uppercase alphabet, which we still use today.”

Attribution: https://www.typographicstudio.com/What-Is-Typography/
All the pieces students submitted revealed the importance of creative work, despite what art form students used to express their imaginations and artistic skills. The Tier II student organization, Poetic Release, encourages poetry as a form of art and hosts workshops and readings for its members to support each other’s work. Poetic Release could not hold their regular workshops or readings for the latter half of the semester, but this did not stop members of Poetic Release from engaging in their creative processes. Several members of Poetic Release submitted poems and prose as their pieces of art. These students used different techniques for sounds, rhyme schemes, and line breaks in writing their poems, and the poems displayed each of the students’ unique, personal poetic style. Two poems spoke of the realities and difficulties of living in the world during quarantine, while one piece of prose expressed a more optimistic view and voiced the hopes and joys of society returning to normal once again. Each and every one of the pieces these artistic and talented students submitted expressed the importance of art and expressiveness during the time of the pandemic. Nutmeg Publishing was happy to bring together this creative community during such an uncertain time!

Into Dust

by Lauren Granville

we live in a loophole that is full of doubt upturned, each moment - time is inside out.

we live in a war zone that is full of pain upended, our lives will never be the same.

we’re living through a time that will be written into books, gruesome at its best and more painful than it looks.

so please, I ask you do not forget us keep our stories going when we turn into dust.

WRITER: LILY HOERNER
PHOTOGRAPHER: MADISON BUSICK
DESIGNER: MEIRA TOMPKINS
in the morning i will look out my open window. perhaps the sky will be clear or perhaps the rain will be washing away yesterday's chalk, but it does not matter. i will go outside no matter the weather, mouth open and breathing in the springtime, holding someone's hand. i will pick dandelions from the garden and hug my neighbor to thank her for the empanadas she made us the night before; i will invite her inside to a house that smells like blueberry muffins and the opposite of fear. when my dad asks me to go the grocery store with him after lunch, i will say yes just so i can run my hands along the produce, just so i can pick out the brightest apples while i wait for my number to be called at the deli counter. after we get home and leave fresh bread on the counter, i will get back in my car and ride with windows all the way down to pick up my best friend. we will drive for three hours, all the way to Maine just to sit with shoulders touching on Cadillac Mountain watching the setting sun burn a hole in a watercolor sky. on our way home, we will stop in all the small towns and buy a sundae from every ice cream shop we see. we will look up at stars that feel closer than ever and each cherry will taste like a different flavor of hope.

-- Kayla Simon space
anything for peace of mind
i need my piece, of mine
i aim to continue coasting basking in the light
the warmth of life
what keeps me sane is ignorance
i won't worry about the details
the ones I can't control control over nothing is everything i find solace in solitude
it's sacred here
i pray for peace, a full soul, silence
i'm whole whilst alone
i dream of answers to questions i've forgotten happy mediums true love comfort
i was born on a sunny day in spring
with a heart of gold quiet tired in place still small warm hollow soft sound is my god and i pray irreverently
watch me grow old and repeat history
Whether you choose to create spreads of your memories or things to look forward to after the pandemic ends, scrapbooking can be a great new activity to keep yourself entertained during self isolation!

Paper of your choice
Choose sturdier paper, such as scrapbooking paper, construction paper, colored copy paper, or card stock, for your background. Lightweight paper, such as newspaper, wrapping paper, or tissue paper, is better for collaging.

Collage materials
This category includes magazine clippings, ephemera, fabric, and stickers.

Tip: Collaging tickets, wrappers, and cards that you saved can add a personal touch to spreads focused on your memories of special events.

Tape or glue
Use tape or glue to attach your pictures or decorate.

Tip: Look for patterned or textured tapes like duct tape and washi tape. This is also a great time to use any leftover glitter glue you have.

Scissors
Cut pictures and paper into different shapes.

Tip: Experiment with pinking or craft scissors to create crinkled cutouts.

Creating Your Spreads
Now that you've gathered supplies, how you assemble them is up to you!

Tip: Don't be afraid to try a new lettering style or use unconventional materials. You can find more inspiration for scrapbooking on Pinterest.

Besides your photos, here's what you need to get started:

FACEBOOK.COM/UCONNNUTMEGPUBLISHING | 19
Garlic Parmesan Knots

Ingredients:

- Biscuit Dough
- 3 tbsp Butter
- 1 tbsp Parsley Flakes
- 1 tbsp Italian seasoning
- 1 tbsp Garlic powder
- Grated Fresh parmesan cheese

Steps:

Shaping the Dough:
Open the dough and cut the dough into six equal pieces. For each piece, cut it in half again. With each piece, roll the dough out into 5 inch strips. After, tie the dough into a knot.

Creating the Topping Mixture:
Melt the butter in the microwave. Mix parsley, italian seasoning, and garlic powder into the mixture. Grate the parmesan cheese into the mixture. (If you use processed parmesan it will not mix as well).

The Final Steps:
Paint the mixture on the knots, applying evenly to each knot. Bake at 400 degrees for 10 minutes. Plate and serve! If you have extra butter mixture, apply on the baked knots.
OWEN'S AUTHENTIC MARGARITA

The margarita is a legendary summer classic and my personal favorite drink of all time. Margaritas are often regarded as the most popular cocktail ever created and can be found on bar menus all across the globe, but very rarely are they crafted properly. After years of experimentation and testing, this has become my signature margarita recipe. Using great tequila and orange liqueur is extremely important, so be sure to buy the best that you can afford. My liquor selections complement each other very well for this drink, so try to use those if you can find them.

1 ½ oz Maestro Dobel Diamanté Tequila (this tequila makes a huge difference in the overall taste)
1 oz Combier Original Orange Liqueur (if unavailable, substitute with Luxardo Triplum or Cointreau)
1 ½ oz Fresh Squeezed Lime Juice (roughly one lime’s worth per drink)
¾ oz of Agave Simple Syrup

To make the agave simple syrup, mix one part light agave nectar and one part warm water together in a separate dish.

Combine ingredients into a shaker full of ice. Shake with extreme vigor until the drink is frothy and strain into a rocks glass full of fresh ice. Garnish with a lime wedge.

Optional: If you like salt on the rim of your glass, purchase coarse-ground margarita salt and a grapefruit from your local grocery store. Slice the grapefruit in half, dip the edge of your glass in the grapefruit, and then dip it in the salt so that it adheres to the rim of the glass and gives a nice additional hint of citrus.
There’s nothing more refreshing than fresh squeezed lemonade in the summertime. This cocktail is perfect for those hot days at the pool or beach.

To make the simple syrup, boil one cup of water in a saucepan and then add 1 ¾ cups of sugar. Stir until dissolved, and chill in the refrigerator.

Combine ingredients in a shaker with ice, strain into a rocks or highball glass with fresh ice. Garnish with a lemon wheel.

Ingredients:
- 1 ½ oz Vodka
- 1 ½ oz Fresh Squeezed Lemon Juice (be sure to strain out the seeds)
- 1 oz Simple Syrup (add more or less depending on how sweet you like it)
- 1 oz water
This cocktail has been an icon of the American South since the early 1800s. Originally used as a medicinal drink by farmers, it combined bourbon whiskey, sugar, and muddled mint, which were all readily available ingredients in the South. Eventually, it gained prominence in the horse racing circles when sterling silver julep cups used to be given as prizes to first-place jockeys. In 1938, it earned the designation as the Official Drink of the Kentucky Derby, and still remains so to this day. It is one of the most beloved drinks to help you cool off during a day at the races, or to keep you relaxed on a warm summer’s night.

Muddle the mint and sugar together in the bottom of a shaker. Add crushed ice and bourbon, then stir for 10 seconds, mixing in the muddled mint and sugar. Pour the whole thing into a rocks glass (don’t strain) and garnish with a mint sprig.
This drink is one of the simplest and most refreshing drinks that you will be able to enjoy all summer long. It is perfect for summer parties, picnics, and get-togethers. The vodka acts as a preservative for the pineapple, so it will last for several weeks. My family makes several batches of this drink every year and it is a constant favorite of everyone that tries it.

1.75 liter of your favorite top-shelf Vodka (Stoli is the original vodka used for this drink, but I prefer to use Ketel One. Tito’s also works very well.)

Three Fresh Pineapples
Optional: 1 liter of Malibu Coconut Rum

Slice the pineapple into medium sized chunks and place at the bottom of a large glass sangria jar with a spigot. Pour the vodka on top of the pineapple, ensuring to cover all the chunks. Allow it to sit for roughly two weeks, giving it a stir daily to keep the pineapple evenly coated in the vodka. When you are ready to serve, dispense into a shaker full of ice, shake vigorously until it develops a froth, and strain into a rocks glass with fresh ice or cold martini glass with no ice. Garnish with a pineapple wedge.

Disclaimer: do NOT attempt to eat the pineapple from the jar afterwards... although vodka-infused pineapple might sound delicious, it tastes absolutely horrible- and here’s why.

The infusing process does two things: it extracts all the sugars out of the pineapple to give the vodka the great pineapple flavor, and it also turns the pineapple into a filter that takes out all the impurities of the vodka. This makes the vodka taste very smooth and sweet, but the pineapple tastes really awful.

This drink is traditionally made with vodka only, but for an extra tropical kick, try adding some Malibu Coconut Rum to the initial mixture, or when you’re ready to serve. It adds a little extra sweetness.
styling a gold clip
two different ways
#1: the classic - in your hair
#2: on your clothes

PHOTOGRAPHER: ANIQA ISLAM
DESIGNER: MEIRA TOMPKINS
ONLINE ACTIVISM

As the second month of quarantine - and everyone’s lives being turned upside down - draws to a close, it’s clear to see how easily it can be to slip into fatigue and lack motivation to find creative ways to stay active. That’s why it is more important than ever to reach out to your community and to give and receive support from your neighbors and friends. UConnPIRG is a leading example of making meaning in these new times. UConnPIRG is a student directed and funded advocacy group, and is known for constantly making waves in state activism on a variety of fronts such as climate change, affordable college, and public health. Despite changing circumstances, it’s members are still going strong, finding new ways to fight for a good cause and to involve UConn students in their work.

For example, they have been focusing on launching online campaigns and raising awareness to #PledgeToStayHome and #FlattenTheCurve. Also, this past Earth Day, UConnPIRG sent out emails to students about a Netflix watch party for an environment-focused film, launched social media campaigns, and encouraged people to write letters to the editor about environmental issues they were passionate about. It is truly amazing to see this organization take a difficult situation as an opportunity to create new means of online activism so we can all contribute from home.

I was able to speak with eighth semester political science and English double major Emily O’Hara (she/her/hers), the UConnPIRG Chapter Chair and ConnPIRG State Board Vice Chair, as well as sixth semester digital media and design major Kyleigh Hillerud (she/her/hers), the UConnPIRG Communications Director and ConnPIRG State Board Chair, about how the organization, as well as they themselves, continued to stay involved and promote change during a global pandemic.

Nutmeg Magazine: How is your organization staying in touch, active, and motivated during this time?

Emily O’Hara/Kyleigh Hillerud: We’ve done our best to maintain meetings while also expanding social events for our chapter members. At least once a week, our Social Chair hosts a coffee hour during his office hours and organizes a social event for those who would like to watch movies, video chat, or play games. Our weekly CORE meetings are still at 7PM on Mondays, which meant that we were able to hold our elections, vote on governing documents, and campaign selection even while social distancing. Additionally, all of our cabin members are hosting office hours for students to touch base one-on-one.

NM: How are you encouraging people to be activists at home? Why is it important?

EO/KH: First and foremost, we’re encouraging students to care for themselves and their families before they take on further responsibility. However, if students are willing and able to organize, we’re encouraging them to take digital action. We’re still organizing through our five PIRG campaigns that we set out to run at the beginning of the semester, but now more than ever we’re encouraging people to share how they #PledgeToStayHome. We recently transitioned from this digital organizing initiative to our #InsideTogether campaign, encouraging people to stay connected even while we have to be physically distant. Also, we’ve launched a website through our Hunger and Homelessness campaign to provide resources for local needs. We’re also communicating with different groups about how to advocate for vote-by-mail; the right to vote shouldn’t force an individual to risk their health and the health of those around them. Right now, it’s imperative that we ensure that people at UConn and across the state are equipped to take care, stay well, and stay safe -- so we have to continue to organize.

NM: What causes are you focusing on currently? Can you say a few words about them?

EO/KH: We are still focusing on getting out the vote, being a resource for students through our Hunger and Homelessness campaign, as well as promoting sustainability in a time of quarantine. Our New Voters Project has been putting pressure on the governor via social media to move back the CT primary so that people are not risking their lives voting. They’ve also been working with the Secretary of State Denise Merrill and her office to pressure the governor to sign an executive order to vote via mail in this upcoming primary election. Our Hunger and Homelessness campaign has been compiling resources such as information about the student first fund, UConn swipes, local food pantries, and shelters in the area for students in need. We have been promoting and challenging students to remain sustainable in this time of quarantining, some ways we are doing this is challenging students on social media to show us how they are remaining sustainable.

NM: Any other points you would like to bring up in regards to stay-at-home activism during the time of COVID?

EO/KH: Now more than ever, if you’re able, it’s important to contact your elected representatives to encourage them to advocate and legislate to protect their constituents. We’re pushing for greater testing and greater personal protective equipment specifically, but for any issues related to COVID-19 policy: call or write to your representatives.

WRITER: JULIANNE HARRIS
PHOTOGRAPHER: MADISON BUSICK
DESIGNER: MEIRA TOMPKINS